The battle of 1897. At that time the Iroquois and the British were still fighting. The British had was a large force, and the Iroquois were a small band. The British were able to take the Iroquois by surprise and victory, but not completely. The Iroquois were able to escape, and the British were left to clean up the area. The British did not suffer any losses, and the Iroquois lost many. The British were able to take control of the area, and the Iroquois were forced to retreat. The British then began to move on to other battles, and the Iroquois were left to fend for themselves.
The battle took place across the river from the hilltop, where the British were. The British were surprised and routed by the American attack. The American troops were able to capture the hilltop and cut off the British retreat. The battle ended with the British retreating to the safety of their camp.

Note: The bullet marks, short pencil lines having underlines—writing groove.peepee.